Call for Student Artwork

The Environmental Science and Policy Program at Michigan State University invites K–12, undergraduate, and graduate students to contribute artwork to its premier annual event, the Fate of the Earth Symposium, held on March 24, 2018, at the Kellogg Hotel and Conference Center. This year, the symposium is focused on bringing together people of all ages to explore environmental issues and solutions from a wide range of perspectives.

Who? All K–12, undergraduate, and graduate students can submit artwork.

What? Artwork should be related to humans’ relationship with the environment. Possible media include, but are not limited to, drawing, painting, photography, sculpture, music, and film.

Where and When? Accepted artwork will be displayed digitally during the Fate of the Earth Symposium at the Kellogg Hotel and Conference Center on March 24, 2018 from 9 to 5 pm. Two-dimensional artwork may also be displayed physically during the symposium, and elementary schoolers’ artwork may also be featured on the symposium’s program and other materials.

Please submit your artwork as an image or a video file to the following link: https://form.jotform.com/80383497666168. The deadline for submissions is March 9, 2018 at 5 pm. A committee of ESPP graduate students and faculty members will review the submissions for display at the symposium. Creators of accepted artwork will be notified by March 10. At that point, arrangements will be made for displaying the artwork during the symposium.

For more information and a schedule of events, please visit the Fate of the Earth website.

If you have any questions, please contact Lin Liu (liulin7@msu.edu) and Stephen Vrla (svrla@msu.edu).